Protect your oldies...

My friend Diane Mason, President of Society of Animal Artists, shared this story with me, and it came all too close to home. I want to share it with you. In a nutshell, Ellie, Diane's young 75-pound A-personality bitch attacked her smaller, old diabetic boy Barney. Barney was seriously injured, rushed to an emergency hospital, where he was made better. Diane ultimately worked hard to find a no kill shelter for Ellie.

My experience was with Sophie and Edgar. Sophie attacked Edgar when he was dying last Thanksgiving. She had him on his back during dinnertime and I managed to get them apart. Point being: remember the "Survival of the Fittest." Sophie did, and so did Ellie. Both Barney and Edgar were quite ill, and the younger bitches followed their instinct to take what they thought was theirs. Do yourself a favor, and when one of your dogs gets old and infirm, be sure to separate the elder from younger, more dominant dogs -- for their own safety -- and -- your peace of mind.

Maybe this is just common sense that Diane and I learned later rather than sooner. I hope it is helpful.
